REPUBLIC OF THE SUDAN
congratulatory message to the
UNIDO 50th anniversary

UNIDO has a special role within the UN family and other international organizations. Established in 1966, this organisation, embodies the aspirations of the world's poor peoples and developing countries in particular, addressing today's economic, social and environmental challenges as enshrined in the Lima Declaration as well as pursuing Inclusive and Sustainable Industrial Development (ISID) to harness industry's full potential to contribute to lasting prosperity for all. Over the years of following these noble vision and mission UNIDO has earned great authority and respect in the international community.

Today, the organisation successfully contributed in benefiting all from industrial growth, and prosperity is shared among women and men, young and old, rural and urban dwellers alike, in all countries.

Our relations with UNIDO, which started immediately after its establishment demonstrate clearly how much the organisation's goals and Sudan's potential can complement each other for the good of sustainable industrial development and affirming common economic values. This forms a vital development component in the world's efforts to eradicate poverty.

I am sure that UNIDO will continue to provide an effective forum for sustainable industrial and development cooperation among countries especially in the awake of global concerns like climate change, renewable energy, environmental threats and sustainable development agenda.
